Once Over Lightly

Daley, Carey Superstitions

POT POURRI: Kansas City fans were surprised the other night when pitcher Bud Daley and third baseman Andy Carey appeared to be arguing on the mound.

Dissension? "No," laughs Daley, the Long Beach boy who has made good in a big way, "it was just a clash of superstitions.

"I've got a superstition. I pick up the resin bag and then I like to have the ball thrown to me. And I drop the bag while the ball is in the air. Andy likes to walk over, pick up the resin bug and hand the pitcher the ball, "Well, he walked over and picked up the bag and tried to hand me the ball, I told him 'No. Drop the bag and throw it.' He said, 'I didn't get a hit last time. Do it my

"Finally we agreed that it was all right since he had picked up the bag anyway, So he dropped it. I picked it up. He threw me the ball and I dropped the bag while the ball was in the air and started pitching.

We got fouled up by this little: byplay, though, Al Kalme hit a three-run homer off the, and Andy didn't get a hit all night."

Is He Hexed? Daley and Carey may be the most superstitious players with the A's. "They've written a lot about my wife feeding me pork chops on the days I pitch for added luck," Bud says. "I go along with it at home, but I hate pork chops and when I'm on the road I never touch 'em. I had a club sandwich before my last win."

ANDY CAREY

Bud points out that these superstitions, while silly, are an aid to one's confidence, "For instance, Carey comes into the dugout, brushes off the seat, puts his glove down, his cap on top of it and then sits on 'em. It doesn't cost anything and might help!"

ONE OF THE MOST RABID baseball fans in the show biz fraternity is an Englishman . . . the master of supense.

At a recent game Hitchcock visited the press box and chatted with the sports writers.

He was asked if he ever had considered doing one of his thrillers with a baseball background and he surprised those present by revealing that he is preparing one called "The Adventures of a Baseball."

He outlined the plot thusly: "There is a fellow who had worked on an assembly line in a baseball factory all his life, stuffing the balls with rubber, cork, yarn and whatever else goes into a baseball.

"At long last he goes berserk and slips a couple of bits of high explosive into the core of one . . . and it goes out with the rest of the shipment of baseballs.

"The camera follows it right through to its careerclimax."

What happens? "Wait and see," he chuckled,

WHEN PITCHERS STAN WILLIAMS and Jack Sanford took turns knocking each other down in Sunday's Dodger-Giant game, we recalled the story that Warren Spahn likes to tell of his first big league game . . . against the Dodgers. It was in 1942 with the old Boston Braves before the club was moved to Milwaukee. Casey Stengel was managing the Braves and PeeWee Reese, who had been red-hot at of the National League's Ex-return from the National game home run hitting con the plate, was up for the Dodgers.

Norm Larker soothed his ulcers with a two-run homer in the seventh inning Tuesday night to bring the Dodgers a 5-4 victory over league-leading Pitts-

Larker's third hit of the evening came off lefthander Fred Green, who had relieved starter Bob Friend one out earlier. Larker looked at two wide pitches before lofting Green's third delivery over the screen, scoring Jim Gilliam ahead of him. A tremendous roar from 51,438 fans greeted Larker's game-winning blast, his second homer of the season and first in the Coliseum. It enabled the Dodgers to regain third plece, one percentage point ahead of St. Louis and cut the Pirates' league lead over Milwaukee to 11/2 games. The Dodgers trail by six. It was most unusual that Larker, though leading the league in hitting, was allowed to face the lefthanded Green, Walter Alston, who manages strictly by the book, has lifted Larker for the righthanded Gil Hodges in numerous similar situations. This time Alston played a hunch and Larker came through with his first major league homer against a southpaw. Larker also singled twice off Friend and raised his average eight points to .359. In his last 27 games, Larker is hitting at a .424 clip. Larry Sherry, who pitched five innings in relief of starter Don Drysdale, picked up his seventh win to go with a like number of losses. He was lifted for a hitter in the seventh and Ed Roebuck finished.

Drysdale, seeking his fourth straight win after a sixgame losing streak, was hit hard, although Alston claimed he had "good stuff." Don gave up three runs and five hits in two innings and was removed for a hitter when Alston saw a chance to get back in the game in the home second.
